

COYOACÁN

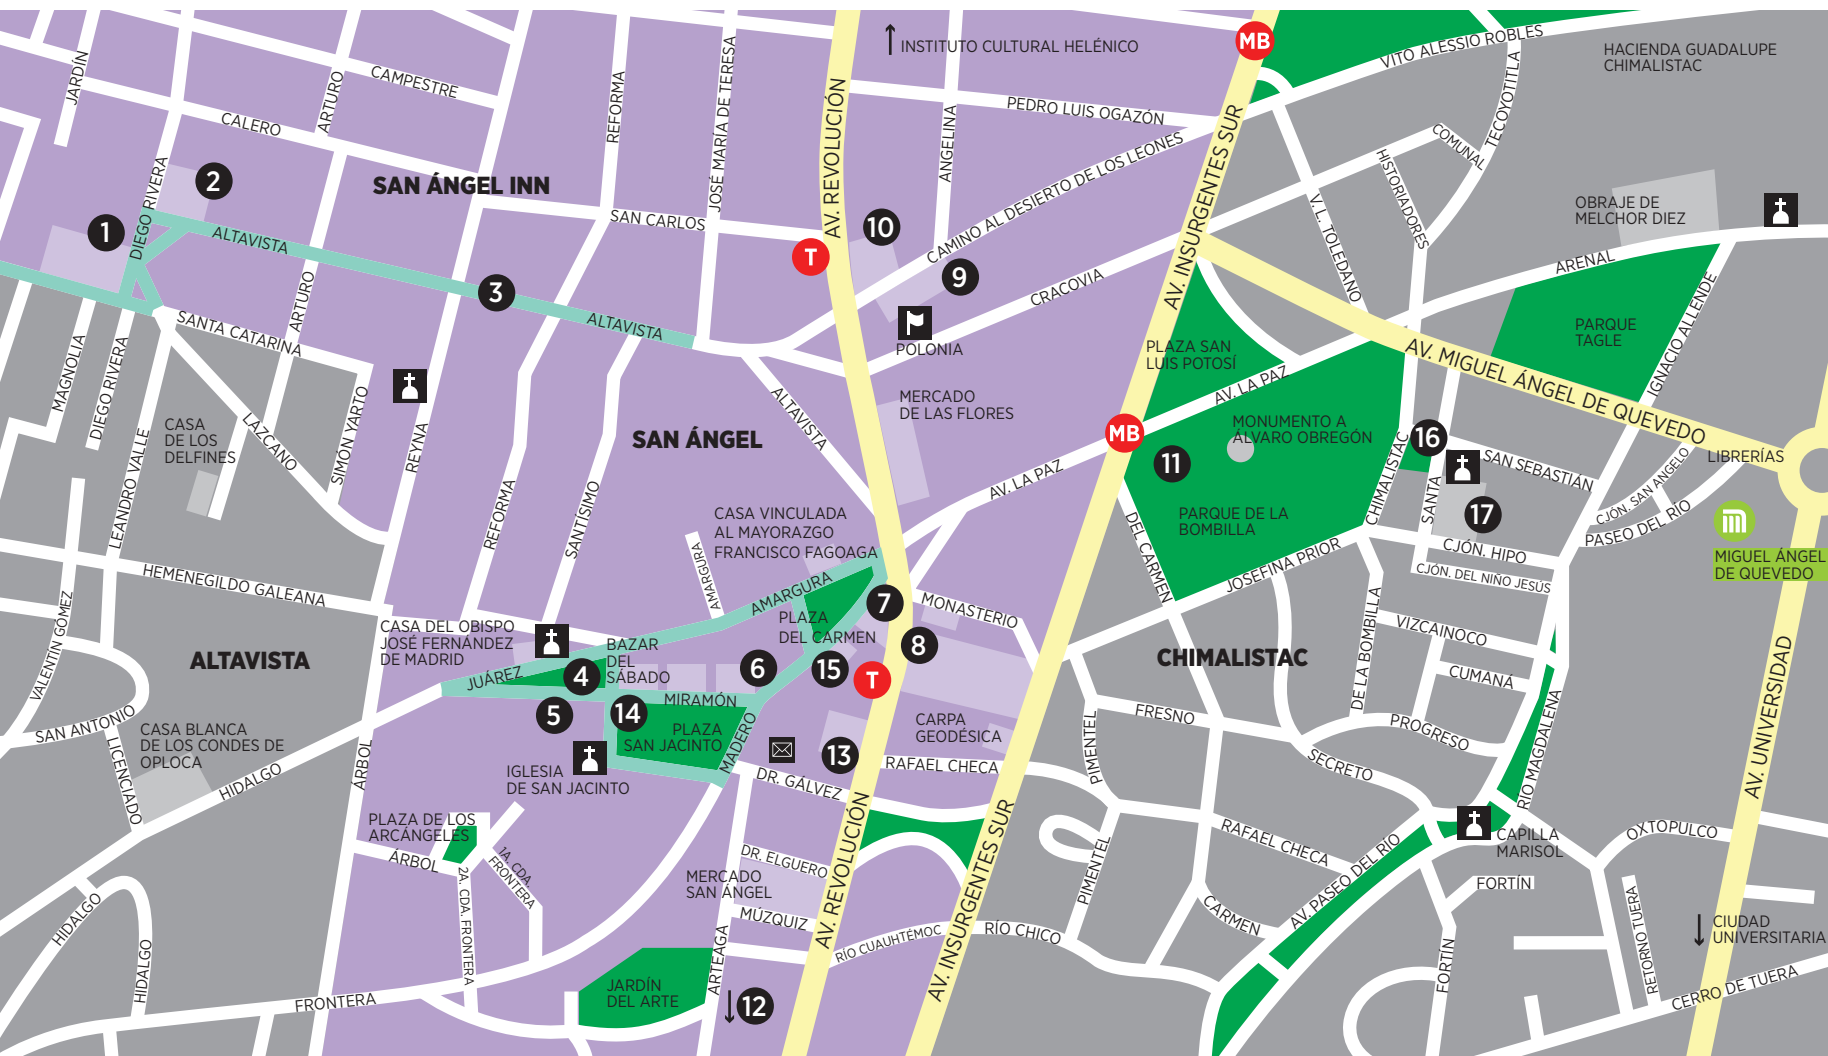

COYOACÁN ("Place of Coyotes" in Náhuatl) was the base of conquistador Hernán Cortés after the conquest of Tenochtitlan, and was later home to Leon Trotsky and Frida Kahlo. It preserves its charming character of traditional neighborhoods and narrow streets. A pleasant way of starting your exploration is at the Viveros, or plant nurseries, a favorite haunt for fresh-air fiends for doing exercise and buying flowers and plants.

SAN ÁNGEL

SAN ÁNGEL was a village and a summer retreat for aristocrats and is now a picturesque residential area that combines Colonial-era, turn-of-the-20th-century and modern-era houses and mansions among squares, cobblestone streets and gardens. Its main attractions are restaurants, galleries, museums and boutiques, as well as the Bazar Sábado handcrafts market on Saturdays.
